THURSDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 18, 1858.

A SOLDIER'S COURTSHIP.

Another marriage, which makes even more stir than that of Malakoff's, amongst a certain set, has just been published—that of Colonel Charras, who is now in exile at Zurich. He is about to espouse Mdle. Mathilde Kestner, the daughter of the proprietor of chemical works established at Thaun. The history of the Colonel's rather burgeois when compared with the interference of Emperors and mighty potentates of the earth, as in the case of that of his old comrade Pelissier. The Colonel was returning from an excursion in the neighborhood of Zurich alone, in the humble and grotesque looking patache which conveys travellers in search after pleasure in the environs of that quiet little place. He had walked far before he came up with the patache, and bad fallen fast asleep, in spite of its hard sides, and hard hide-bound cushions .-On awaking he found himself seated opposite a young lady who had entered the patache during his slumber, and coriously enough, had fallen asleep likewise. Upon her knee lay an open volume, which the Colonel recognized at once as the history of the revolution of February. The life of Colonel Charras was just the place where the reader bad opened it, and on her awaking, the Colonel, highly amused, entered easily into conversation concerning the men and events of that day. The young lady professed herself an ardent admirer of the whole of the patriotic party, particularly of Charras, the incidents of whose career she declared herself never weary of hearing. The Colonel, much flattered, of course, ventured to dispute with the young lady several questions upon which she was in error concerning the hero she sought to defend with so much zeal. The question of his personal appearance particularly was one upon which she was quite of a different opinion from that of her companion, and concerning everything relating to his babite and manners of life, as she had her information from people who passed their whole existence with him-of course she must know, and could not therefore accept the contradiction of an entire stranger. Hereupon the Colonel, completely beaten, was forced to silence; and merely looking at the book once more, as if to examine the dates, he adroitly inserted his card as if by way of marking the place. In a few moments more the young lady alighted at the iron gate of a fabrique close to Zurieh, and the Colonel, of course, deemed the acquaintance at an end. Next day he received a most charming note from the fair incognita, who, full of shame and repentance, excused herself for the apparent impertinence of which she had been guilty in sustaining an opinion concerning her idol against that of an evident friend of his; and begging him to pay her a visit, in order to give her the opprotunity of rectifying the impression which she must have produced in the patache by her obstinate outrecuidame. The Colonel needed no second invitation. Already charmed beyoud expression, the delicacy and tact displayed in the note completely achieved the conquest of his heart, and he surrendered without condition. The delight and astonishment of the fair Mathilde may be easily conceived when she learnt that it was Colonel Charras in person, and no counterfeit whose acquaintance she had made. Cupid's wings fly fast at a certain period of life, and as no time was to be lost, the marriage was fixed at once for the 23d of this month, the day on which the fair bride will attain ber 25th birthday .- Court Journal.

NOVEMBER.

Room for the athlete! room for the broadshouldered, deep-chested and vigorous Noleaps with an clustic bound into the arena! He has divested himself of all superfluous clothing; every limb is bare and his brawny trunk stands in glorious majesty, while his head, encircled by a corenet of the purple vine and scarlet berries, proclaime him the King of the Autumo! Doomed as he is, deserted by his fleeting brethren, pressed by the advancing legions of gloomy Winter, he still looks "every inch a king!" He has gathered about him his vassals, who neither tremble with fear nor look pale at the portents around them, but every one has thrown down his leafy gauntlet, and bent his branchy lance to await the coming storm! rounded himself with all the luxurious garniture of nature and the voluptuous revelry of the season, and looks to his parent Sun to send down his fires to consume them all before he will surrender! Above and around him the winds sing a witching song, and the bright plumage of the clouds glows with weird lustre as their winged flocks soar to the zenith or sweep majestically to rest upon the bosom of the horizon. Type of the regal month-symbol of the pending fate of November-around the golden couch of the seting sun the curtains of royal purple are drawn, and earth and sky are bushed and mute, leet a breath should disturb his sleep, while stare that spangle the measureless dome above sing lowly and softly their lullaby .-So will November sink to repose, after a life of majesty and strong action, to the mellow cadences of the Indian Summer, amid the blazonry of the golden maple, the gorgeous crim son of the forests, and the bright scarlet of the running vines which gird his sturdy guard of monarch cake. Who then can assent to the poet's idea that with November, "the melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year?" Not we! There is no sadness in any work of God's providence, he orders all things in kindness and his smile can warm this last autumnal month and make it gorgeous in the sunshine which fills the buman soul with gratitude and illuminates it with the full, bright and beatific knowledge of his Eternal Love .- Louisville Journal.
